Introduction

There are dozens of free DoFollow Search engines listed on blogs and forums. Each one that is posted claims to be filled with hundreds if not thousands of DoFollow blogs just waiting for you to leave a comment to get a valuable dofollow backlink. Unfortunately, this is rarely the case. I've generally believed that about 10% of DoFollow blogs change back to NoFollow each month because of spam.

Today I woke up and decided to create a detailed whitepaper on 3 of the most popular and best dofollow search engines.

I decided to test

<http://www.inlineseo.com/dofollowdiver/>

<http://atniz.com/dofollow-search-engine/>

To fairly test these site I picked 5 popular searches for DoFollow commenters.

Scoring

I checked the top 10 unique sites each search engine returned for the test terms. A point was assigned if the blog was dofollow. To keep the test simple and as objective as possible I didn't judge whether the result was on topic.

The answer a few finer points about judging... I was very generous in scoring. If the post didn't have any comments or if the page simply never allowed commenting, I searched the rest of the site to determine if it was dofollow or not. In addition, I still gave points if it appeared the site was relatively tightly moderated. Some sites had only a few dofollows mixed with many NoFollows but I still gave them a point.

Finally I counted sites that use LinkLuv as dofollow.

DoFollowSearchEngine.com is updated every month. This test was conducted on March 29th. The last updated of the site was March 1st. As expected 10% of the sites became NoFollow. I'm just finishing up the latest update which will be updated on April 1st.

Monthly maintenance is a must for a dofollow search engine.
